SUINDÁ LODGE

Experience sight casting nirvana on the clear sand-bar flats the Paraná is famous for

SUINDÁ LODGE

ITATÍ, CORRIENTES, ARGENTINA

Perfectly placed in the heart of Argentina's best dorado fishing, Suindá Lodge sits high on the riverbank of the clear upper part of the Paraná River. Our beautiful jungle lodge serves as a central hub and resting place for anglers on the prowl for the giant Golden Dorado that live in these waters. Whether crashing Sabalo on sand flats or cruising the jungle lined banks, these fish are smart, tricky, moody and sensitive, making for some of the most technical, yet rewarding fishing out there.

WHY CHOOSE SUINDA LODGE?

- Our beautiful constructed and intimate wooden jungle Lodge houses 10 anglers
- Professional Guides specialize in various fly-fishing techniques for Dorado
- Opportunities for double-digit Dorado all season long
- Located on the most pristine section of the legendary Paraná River with great diversity of fish habitat
- Clear water offers exceptional sight-fishing opportunities for dorado, pirá pitá, and pacú
- Custom, comfort-enhanced boats specifically designed for this fishery
- Superb fishing gear, from our custom skiffs to industry-leading fishing equipment, available at no extra cost.
- Nature in abundance
- À la carte menu with delicious local and international cuisine and wines

LOCATION

- Suindá is located on the southern bank (Argentina side) of the Paraná River, which is the borderline between Argentina and Paraguay.
- The Lodge is closest to the river town of Itatí found in the Corrientes Region.
- This section of the Paraná flows clear along beautiful fishy banks, sandbars, rocks and islands that create deltas and smaller “riachos” (streams)

GETTING THERE

- Take a one-hour flight from Buenos Aires domestic airport to either COR or RES. From there it is a short drive to the lodge:
 - 45 minutes drive from CNQ
 - 2 hour drive from RES

The sandbars are where the true excitement lies. When the conditions are right, colossal dorado hunt sabalo baitfish that seasonally congregate in big schools, resulting in massive boiling feeding frenzies in knee-deep water

From there, it’s a short walk to the water, where you’ll spend your days exploring the Paraná’s most productive, structure-rich sections for monster Dorado.

THE FISHING

Fishing at Suindá takes place on the upper Paraná River. The “Río Paraná” is the second longest river in South America, next to the sprawling Amazon. We fish a clear-flowing stretch of water where the river borders Paraguay, flanked by jungle expanses on both its edges. You’ll explore this dynamic fishery on 21-foot boats which have been specifically designed for two anglers to fish simultaneously. After the engines are cut, you’ll drift the structure-rich shorelines of the Río Paraná, casting to sunken logs, in and around boulders, and across clear sandbars. We mostly fish streamers on floating lines, which makes for explosive visual takes. Paraná River Golden Dorado average 5 to 20 pounds, but there are also fish pushing 30+ pounds. When the conditions align, you’ll wade clear sandbars where sabalo baitfish school up in shallow waters. This is the ultimate sight-fishing experience, where landing monsters is a real possibility. As the sun sets on the horizon, you might find yourself swinging big flies through productive mid-river rock gardens. The hard takes on the swing are unforgettable.

In addition to Golden Dorado, we also target Pirá Pitá on light tackle (6 and 7-weight rods). This species is pound for pound one of the stronger fish we catch on big dries and smaller mouse patterns. Our Pirá Pitá average 2 to 10 pounds. Pacú also abound here, and we typically sight-cast for them with “fruit” flies. They also take on the surface, and range from 5 to 15 pounds (heavier, if you’re lucky). At Suindá we don’t trailer boats. They will be waiting for you at the dock, gassed up and ready to go, every morning.
