In the heart of the Río Grande watershed, lie the best pools on the river, and the finest fish.

KAU TAPEN LODGE

Where it all started

In 1984, the first fishing lodge ever was established on the Río Grande, it's name; Kau Tapen. Which, in the Ona Language, means “House of Fishing”; a fitting name as you won’t find a better “home” from which to target the world’s largest sea-run brown trout. Today, several decades later, its legendary waters continue to inspire and delight both newcomers and well-traveled anglers.

With the wind, most days at your back, Anglers will fish either single- or two-handed rods to pursue the prized sea-run trout. From skating bombers through broad tail-outs and swing streamers across the river’s best beats to drifting nymphs against deep cut banks, anglers use an assortment of various methods to chase the fish that will haunt you for the rest of your days.

LOCATION

The lodge is located on the banks of the Río Grande in Tierra del Fuego, Argentina. The success of the fishery on the Río Grande is a modern-day fisherman's Cinderella story. In just a decade, through access control and catch-and-release regulations, average catch rates have risen from less than a fish a day in the early '80s to multiple fish per person, per day. Starting with the opening of Kau Tapen Lodge in the early '80s, the Río Grande has become the most productive sea-run brown trout fishery in the world.

However, trout numbers fluctuate with ocean variables, tides, water levels, and a host of other natural factors. The Río Grande flows west to east from the Andes down to the Atlantic Ocean through approximately 60 miles of Argentine territory. The landscape of Tierra del Fuego is reminiscent of Wyoming or the Scottish low country. It includes sparsely populated wilderness, large sheep farming estancias, and wild herds of llama-like Guanacos, as well as plentiful fox and condor populations.

GETTING THERE

Guests fly into Buenos Aires, Argentina, and typically overnight there, with a day to spend touring this wonderful city. Arrival day at Kau Tapen is set for Saturday. Commercial airlines fly from Buenos Aires to the airport of Río Grande (RGA), where a lodge representative will meet you after the 3-hour flight. The transfer from Río Grande airport to the lodge takes 30 minutes. Depending on flight schedules, guests can also fly to Ushuaia Airport (USH). From there, the transfers to the lodge takes 3 hours. On arrival at the lodge, guests are welcomed with cocktails by the entire Kau Tapen staff.

THE FISHING

At Kau Tapen we fish for Sea-Run Brown Trout weighing an average of 7 lbs and ascending to 30lbs and above. Our waters cover on 25km of the Río Grande as well as 25km of the Río Menendez; both with private access. The river offers easy wading on fine gravel bottom.

Although most of their lives are spent in the ocean, sea-run brown trout seem to retain more of the eccentricities of resident browns than, for instance, steelhead do of resident rainbows. Moody fish, they must be shown flies the way they want to see them at the precise time that they're ready to take. The Río Grande isn't a big river. Thus, it's compatible with a wide range of techniques; critical since a large sea-run brown trout may demand that a fly be fed to it on the bottom one hour but rise to a skating fly the next. Water levels can change from week to week and they generally drop as the season progresses.

Vary your presentations in each pool fished until you find the right formula of fly, line, drift or swing, and retrieve. Also heed the advice of your guide, whose primary aim is to recommend methods that will help you hook and bring more fish to the net. By and large, the Río Grande's sea-run brown trout seem to lie near cut banks during the middle of the day, though in low water they will also lie in the faster necks of pools. They typically move into these areas during the early morning, evening, and nighttime hours.

Generally, "tails in the morning and heads at night" is a good rule. Also look for fish distributed throughout pools on calm, overcast days. On sunny days, one theory holds that sea-run brown trout will take best if they don't have the sun in their eyes, although this theory, like others, is often affected by the number of fish in a particular pool and the number of "takers."

The Rio Grande has become the most productive sea-run brown trout fishery in the world.

Usually, guests will leave the lodge around 9 o'clock after breakfast, and fish until 1 o'clock. Following a big lunch and a siesta (the duration depends on the season), guests return to the river in the late afternoon and fish until dark. Guests will be greeted with cocktails upon their return, shortly followed by dinner. Fishing hours will change slightly depending on the time of year.
