DELTA LODGE

BUENOS AIRES, ARGENTINA

An exclusive lodge on a private island, beautifully designed and surrounded by pristine delta channels, islands, and wildlife—just minutes from Buenos Aires, yet a world apart.

DELTA LODGE

Dorado fishing in Buenos Aires' backyard

Imagine fishing for golden dorado less than an hour from downtown Buenos Aires. Delta Lodge offers a truly unique experience set among the quiet green islands and winding channels of the Paraná Delta—ideal for both dedicated anglers and travelers with limited time.

Hidden deep within the delta's lush landscape, the lodge delivers the exceptional fishing, guiding, lodging, and cuisine that define the Nervous Waters experience. Fishing here is productive, visual, and varied, offering a true multi-species program that targets golden dorado and tararira, along with other native species, using fly, spinning, and conventional tackle.

We offer two ways to experience this remarkable fishery:

LOCATION

The lodge is located less than an hour away from downtown Buenos Aires, on the second section of the Lower Paraná Delta in the northeastern Buenos Aires province. The Paraná River, the second largest river in South America, develops into an incredible ecosystem and at its end runs into the Rio de la Plata, just outside of greater Buenos Aires. Known as the “Delta”, this labyrinth of streams, braids, side-channels, bays, and islands brims with wildlife and beautiful Dorado waters.

Few cosmopolitan cities have such an amazing abundance of wilderness right at their doorsteps. Due to the unique nature of this zone, UNESCO designated it a “Biosphere Reserve” back in 2000. This is where the legendary Paraná River Basin ends its journey and flows into the Rio de la Plata, and where you’ll find the Delta Fishing Lodge. Thousands of creeks, streams, channels, islands, and rivers make up this extensive 220,000-acre ecosystem. In addition to great fishing, the area is home to incredible birdlife and is a must-visit for birders.

GETTING THERE

Guests fly into Buenos Aires and typically overnight there after spending a day touring this wonderful city. A transfer with a professional driver will pick up guests either at the international or domestic airport in Buenos Aires, or at the hotel where guests are staying. Drive time to the marina, where the guide and the skiff will be waiting, is about 30-to-45 minutes depending on the traffic. The boat ride from the marina to the lodge is about 30-40 minutes through the Delta and is an experience in and of itself.

Depending on conditions, we operate within nearby island chains scattered throughout the Paraná Delta. Fishing habitats include small channels in between islands, shorelines along the main and lower branches of the Paraná, lagoons, and the exterior border of the delta where it meets the Rio de la Plata.

THE FISHING

FLY FISHING & SPINNING

Although the Dorado is one of the most exciting gamefish to pursue, there is very little written about fly fishing for Dorado in this area. The species' complex feeding regime and migratory nature ensure challenging and rewarding fishing opportunities for both expert and entry-level anglers. Dorado are strong and acrobatic—and their pursuit is often more about quality experiences than the numbers game. Our dorado range from 5-to-8 pounds, but guests have landed fish in the 15+ pound range.

In terms of dorados, you can hardly catch a giant one in the area, but their range of moods and behaviors is, in general, wider than anywhere else because of the characteristics of the area. Although they might appear, 20 plus lbs dorados are exceptional. The approach and fishing techniques are as fine as they get: all floating lines –and many times even floating flies, like poppers, divers, and mice imitations-. For lure fishing enthusiasts, these sorts of waters, because of their diversity in terms of structure, present a most enjoyable scene.

On the flip side, most other species reach their full potential here. This is likely the most consistent destination in the country for catching trophy-sized tararira, with the added bonus of being one of the few places—outside of Uruguay—where you may encounter the elusive and glorious Tararira Azul, a subspecies known for its impressive size and fighting capacity. The lower section of the Paraná Delta and the first kilometers of the Río de la Plata, are also where the chances for seriously big Chafalotes are higher than anywhere else. Besides the mentioned species, from late November to mid-April, these waters are regularly visited by Manduva, Manduví real, Pirá Pitá, Surubí, Cabeza Amarga, Pico-Pato, Lacha, many different kinds of catfish... the list is long.

Many of our guests enjoy fishing for them right at the lodge, after the daily sessions. Our home pool and docks are literally a few meters away from the rooms and dining room, so at any time anybody can grab a rod and do some fishing while having a drink, smoking a cigar, or even having dinner right there in case the bite is on. Our favorite approach at night is fishing with floats. With the dock lights on, you can see all-around easily. It's really cool. For those who love coarse fishing, it can be quite amazing.

Delta Lodge is the only setup specifically catering to fishing enthusiasts in the heart of the Paraná Delta. While dorado is our primary target, a wide variety of species inhabit these waters year-round.

Tararira (wolf fish) are another standout sport species in these waters, renowned for their explosive takes on surface flies.

During the spring, summer, and fall months, pati—a native catfish—are commonly found in good sizes, occasionally reaching the 20–30+ lb range. Strong fighters, they are especially enjoyable to catch on conventional tackle.

On many occasions, you will find yourself searching for dorado and tararira through the intricate network of creeks and braided wetlands that make up the delta, often poling quietly in shallow water.

From June through December, Karandá Lodge offers a different perspective on the Middle Paraná system, targeting dorado, pacú, and pirá pitá among island channels and heavy structure during the winter and spring months. Farther south, Patagonia's trout season runs from December through April. Chime and Futa deliver classic dry-fly and streamer fishing for brown and rainbow trout, while Tierra del Fuego's sea-run brown trout fishery at Kau Tapen and Villa María peaks from January through April.

Beyond fishing, David Denies Bird Hunting delivers the finest wingshooting in Argentina and Uruguay. High-volume dove shooting is available year round, while pigeon shooting runs primarily from May through September. During the winter months, from May through August, Argentina and Uruguay offer outstanding perdiz and duck hunting, making it easy to combine a stay at Delta with a classic wingshooting experience across peak seasons.

For those interested in big game, Red Stag Patagonia provides free-range hunting across prime seasons.
